

RESIDENTS IN COURT TO HALT MILK PLANT BLDG.

Doylestown Folks Object To Erection of New Structure by Firm

COMPLAIN OF THE NOISE

Witnesses Testify That Noise and Odor Are Objectionable 7 Days A Week

DOYLESTOWN, April 17.—Four residents of Decatur street yesterday testified in an injunction proceedings heard in the Court of Common Pleas before Judge Hiram H. Keller in which the Court is being asked to enjoin Doylestown's largest retail and wholesale milk bottling and pasteurizing plant for further operation and to stop the erection of a new $35,000 plant being erected by the Smith's Dairy, owned by Albert Smith.

A number of witnesses were called yesterday. Court adjourned at 4:15 until this morning pending a decision on a point of law raised in the case in which Mrs. Albert Smith, wife of the defendant, was called to the witness stand by the plaintiff's counsel.

Mrs. Smith was asked by John L. DuBois, attorney for the plaintiffs, whether or not she did not make a statement to Robert Horan and Mrs. Irvin Michener that "she was glad that her husband was moving his plant to another location because of the dirt and noise of present plant, and that the other people could get it."

The defendant's attorney, Thomas Ross, strenuously objected to that question being answered although before the objection could be made Mrs. Smith had answered "no."

Mr. Ross argued to the court that this was a case where the plaintiffs were trying to prove a private nuisance and that Mrs. Smith is not one of the complainants but was simply called by the plaintiff counsel. Mr. Ross also contended that Mrs. Smith was called and testified against her husband, which is not permissible.

Mrs. Smith stated that she did not hear an unnecessary noise coming from her husband's plant.

"Of course, I live so close that I hear the noise of loading and unloading," she said.

The complainants in the case are Joseph A. Wodock, manager of the Strand Theatre; Rolandus R. Peterman, an agricultural implement dealer; James Stinson, a shoemaker, and his wife; Mrs. Mary S. Stinson, all of Decatur street. The Smith Dairy is near the homes of the plaintiffs.

The defendant operates a creamery at the corner of Wood and Decatur streets and is erecting a new plant nearby. The plaintiffs alleged yesterday in testifying that beginning at two and three o'clock in the morning an incessant din and loading and unloading of milk cans and bottles disturbs their slumber. In the summer, several of them said, the stench of sour milk arises from the creamery plant and permeates the air, menacing their health and depreciating the value of their properties.

Mr. Wodock testified that at times the noise and stench was unbearable. Mr. Wodock described the section as a residential section. Under cross examination he said that he heard no noises coming from other business places in the vicinity, including the Nyce Mill, Foxall Garage, Conroy Garage, and the rubber plant.

James Stinson, who lives 200 yards from the plant, said the noise is the same on Sundays and weekdays. He said the odor never gets into his house. There are eighteen residences (Continued on Page 3)

COMMITTEE COMPLETES "SAFEGUARDING CLAUSE"

Allows Signatory Nations To Increase Their Naval Programs

FAVORS THREE POWERS

By Harry R. Flory
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

LONDON, Apr. 17.—Participation of the United States in the so-called "safeguarding clause" in the tri-lateral naval limitation agreement has been so arranged as to keep America free from entanglement in European naval problems, Senator Joseph T. Robinson, of Arkansas, a leading member of the American delegation, declared in an official statement today.

The drafting committee of the conference today completed wording of the clause, which would allow the signatory nations to increase their naval programs if a non-signatory power embarked upon a policy of strong naval construction.

The clause is understood to be favorable to the British, American and Japanese delegations, but the latter probably will refer the text to Tokyo for consideration.

MISS LETITIA E. KERR BRIDE OF C. E. RITTNER

Attractive Wedding Takes Place at St. Paul's
Chapel, Edgely

RECEPTION IS HELD

A very pretty wedding was solemnized in St. Paul's Chapel, Edgely, last evening at seven-thirty o'clock, when Miss Letitia Esther Kerr, daughter of Mrs. Anna Kerr, of Edgely, became the bride of Charles E. Rittner, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Rittner, also of Edgely.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Francis Smith, pastor of the church and the wedding march was played by Mr. Tate of Edgely. The church was prettily decorated with cut flowers and palms.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother, Frank Kerr, of Edgely, was attired in a beautiful white dress, the bodice of which was made of lace with short puffed sleeves and the skirt was quite long, ending in the uneven hemline. She wore long white lace gloves, white slippers and stockings, and her veil of tulle was cap shape, trimmed with pearls. She carried a shower bouquet of white roses.

Miss Grace Rittner, of Edgely, sister of the groom, was maid of honor, and Miss Katharine Saylor, of Reading, a cousin of the bride, was bridesmaid. Miss Rittner was attractive in a gown of Nile green satin, made bodice effect, low neck-line, sleeveless, and the skirt was long, featuring the uneven hemline. A flower was caught at the waist line on the left side and a large bow of the material was gracefully tied at the waistline in the back. She wore white slippers and stockings, long white gloves, a rhinestone band around her hair and carried an arm bouquet of pink roses.

Miss Saylor, the bridesmaid, wore a gown of pink satin, made exactly like the gown worn by Miss Rittner. She wore white slippers and stockings, long white gloves, a large pink picture hat and carried an arm bouquet of pink roses.

William Reynolds, of Edgely, was best man and the ushers were Edward and Harold Rittner, of Edgely, brothers of the groom.

After the ceremony, a reception was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds, of Grieb avenue. About fifty guests were present. The home was prettily decorated for the occasion. The happy couple left this morning for a honeymoon trip to be spent in Washington, D. C., where they will remain for a few days. The bride wore as her traveling costume, a blue canton crepe dress, trimmed with egg shell satin, tan coat, cream color hat, slippers and stockings and hand-bag to match. Upon their return, they will make their home with Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds.

Mrs. Rittner was born and raised in Bristol, and attended the public schools. Mr. Rittner was born in Philadelphia, but has been living in Edgely for the past several years and at the present time, is employed at the Keystone Aircraft Corporation. Both are well known and have many friends in Edgely and Bristol. Guests attending the wedding were from Bristol, Edgely, Philadelphia and Reading.

FIFTY LABOR CHIEFS INDORSE THE CANDIDACY OF SENATOR JOSEPH R. GRUNDY TO SUCCEED HIMSELF

Visit Senator in Office at Philadelphia and Give Assurance of Primary Support—Call Him Workers' Aide—Candidate Issues Statement of His Record on Legislation Affecting the Workers in General

PHILADELPHIA, Apr. 17.—A delegation of more than fifty labor leaders, representing the Council of Associated Building Trades of Philadelphia, which includes many of the unions affiliated with the Philadelphia Central Labor Union, after a visit to the offices of Senator Joseph R. Grundy Tuesday night commended his candidacy to the people of the Commonwealth.

The labor leaders, who packed the Grundy suite of offices in the Finance Building, assured the junior Senator of their support and obtained from him a first-hand statement of his record upon labor legislation before the Legislature during the last twenty years.

Frank Feeney, international president of the Elevator Constructors Union, presented the delegation to Mr. Grundy in a formal statement, in which he said: "We find your public career punctuated with constructive ability, energy and public spirit of the highest type."

The head of the Elevator Constructors Union said an investigation of Mr. Grundy's record reveals that he had "on innumerable occasions used your influence with your associated political friends to further the cause of measures protecting working people with workmen's compensation enactments."

"In view of your constructive legislative work," continued Mr. Feeney, "and recognizing your unusually keen abilities in the intricacies of protective tariff legislation, which means prosperity to the working people of our city and State, this delegation takes this opportunity of commending your candidacy for the United States Senate as one of the most advantageous opportunities presented to the voters of the Commonwealth in decades."

Accompanying the formal statement of Mr. Feeney was a copy of the resolutions adopted by the Associated Building Trades on April 11, in which it was charged that the city administration has "done absolutely nothing for and much against the interests of the trade unionists and their organizations in this community."

In the statement of his record on legislation affecting the workers, Mr. Grundy devoted much space to the attacks upon him by the North American several years ago. He said the first workmen's compensation bill was presented to the Legislature by a commission headed by David A. Reed, now

United States Senator, at the legislative session of 1913. The bill, he said, was favored by the Legislators from Bucks County, and that the Pennsylvania Manufacturers' Association, of which he was the president, was the only organization in the State which really interested itself in the legislation.

The bill was killed, Senator Grundy said, when objection to its form was made by Senator William E. Crow, of Fayette County.

Laws covering the employment of women were enacted at the 1913 session, the Senator said, and were favored by the Senator and Representatives from Bucks County.

Mr. Grundy pointed out that in 1905 the industrialists went to Harrisburg and urged the raising of the minimum age of the employment of children from 13 to 14 years. In 1913, he said, an effort to modernize laws relating to children in industry was defeated through mysterious influences.

"Following his inauguration," said Senator Grundy, "Governor Brumbaugh appointed as his Attorney General Francis Shunk Brown, of Philadelphia, who resurrected the compensation bill which so nearly became a law during the 1913 legislative session."

"I judge that after a study of its features he came to the conclusion that the efforts of Governor Tener's commission had not been in vain, for he dusted it off, repainted and retrimmed it here and there, and preparatory to presenting it to the 1915 Legislature, sent copies to labor and other organizations throughout the State, asking for suggestions."

"The fact that this bill had been brought forward from 1913 was not communicated, however, to the general public, and in particular not to the immense throng which crowded the hall of the House at Harrisburg during the public hearing accorded those who wished to be heard."

"Those who attended that hearing will recall the flowery speech in which Attorney General Brown lavished more than fulsome praise upon what he called a wonderfully constructive piece of legislation. And yet, despite what was said about it that afternoon, the bill, except for minor changes, continued to be the bill prepared several years before by Governor Tener's commission."

INTERDEPENDENCE

There isn't any such thing as a localized industry for financial calamity. Hit one spot hard and workers on the other side of the world may be directly affected, just as the knees of a boxer feel the jolt of a blow on the jaw.

Last fall's stock market crash in the United States closed diamond mines in South Africa, curtailed production of European factories, building high-priced automobiles, closed English cotton mills, hurt the jewelry and hotel businesses in Europe and girdled the globe with its blighting effect.

England's campaign against exportation of her art treasures and ancient landmarks was temporarily aided by the Wall Street disaster, there having been few sales of costly paintings and manuscripts since those fateful October days.

That crash had more to do with our own business depression than is usually admitted, for few realized the extent to which the inflated securities values were maintaining high industrial production and, therefore, employment. Moreover, stock market losses wiped out the operating resources of many a manufacturer.

The interdependence of business is no less than the interdependence of nations. When one prospers others prosper, and losses of one section are registered thousands of miles in corresponding losses.

THE IRISH "CRISIS"

The dramatic resignation and immediate reelection of President William T. Cosgrave of the Irish Free State was not, as some saw it, a sign of drastic political change in Ireland. Rather it was a move to demonstrate that the situation is fairly well stabilized.

President Cosgrave has held office for eight years, his administration having outlived all European contemporary governments. By some irony of fate the Irish government has far surpassed in stability the governments of England and France where little was expected of Irish independence.

Ireland's stability appears in a better light when it is understood that while Cosgrave is commonly called president, his position does not correspond to that of the president of the United States. As president of the executive council he is really a prime minister, elected by the Dail and responsible to that body. He is supposed to resign if his administration fails to command a legislative majority. So Ireland's premier has retained office eight consecutive years while England and France have been changing them so fast the outsider never knows who is in and who is out.

President Cosgrave resigned upon the defeat of the government over an old age pension bill. As a matter of strategy he chose a demonstration by forcing an election that the reverse was due to the absence of some of his adherents. He was reelected.

Ireland will come through!

SYNOPSIS

David Wade awakes after a prolonged sleep, following his arrival at a New Guinea settlement, in a boat at the only hotel in the place to find that he has been robbed of his savings. Stella Blackney, daughter of Mr. Blackney, owner of the hotel, is in the room when he opens his eyes and tells him she had native boys carry him into the hotel when she found him in a drunken stupor on the beach. She seems more distressed at his condition than by the loss of his savings.

"It's certainly very mysterious," he said to himself, and tried to put from him the memory of the girl's distressful eyes. They were beautiful eyes, he thought.

Then he rose and went to the bathroom; and presently, his splendid youth responding to the invigorating effect of the cold shower, he entered the breakfast-room. The captain and his mate, seated at the table, greeted him with friendly mockery, hailing him as one back from the dead, and making jests about the virtues of temperance, and declaring lugubriously the extent of their alleged anxiety concerning him.

"And the young woman was anxious, too—though she tried hard to hide it," said the mate, who stared at Wade glanced quickly to see if was a half-bred Portugee, that's what he was. His father used to be a pearl-diver round about Hawaii. The captain had known the father personally—a big, glash person, light-skinned for a Portugee, wearing earrings, finger-rings and loud clothes, and a great one for fancying himself with the women. "But none of the women could stand him," continued the captain. "None of the decent ones, that is—and they were the kind he wanted most. But that didn't stop the swine!—Not a bit of it. He ended up by clearing out with a young woman who was governess to a planter's youngsters."

"You mean he eloped with her?" Wade put in.

"Elope nothing!" said the captain. "He took her by force—kidnaped her. There was a great bust-up about it, and the water-police and patrol-boats were out after him in no time. But that Portugee had a good working knowledge of the out-of-the-way islands, and he gave them the slip. It wasn't till a year later that one of the pearling crowd came upon his hiding-place. Saying nothing to the police, the pearler brought the rest of the boys."

The captain signalled one of the servants to bring him more coffee. "And then," he went on, "the young woman was dead, and there was a tiny weaver of a kid the Portugee was trying to rear on condensed milk, without being too enthusiastic about it, either. There Coming around a bend of the beach, they saw the storekeeper himself.

Stella, supervising the native servants, had heard. "A good girl is Stella," said the captain. "She did her best to keep us on the straight and narrow path. Didn't you, Stella?"

As though she had not heard, the girl made no reply. The captain lowered his voice. "If her old mother had been up and about it would have been different. She wouldn't have shut the bar on us. No fear! Not her! Mr. Blackney takes all she can get, and then some. I reckon Stella's in for a bad time when the old girl gets better—if she ever does."

"Hill, is she?" asked Wade, remembering that since arriving at the settlement he had seen nothing of her.

"Drink," said the mate laconically. "A regular—what do you call it?—dipsomaniac; that's the word, isn't it?" he went on. "From what I hear she's had several bad turns lately, and this time the doctor made her take to bed. She's pretty bad. Rotten for the daughter, ah?"

A mop-haired and chocolate-skinned native set before them coffee and rolls.

"Rotten, as you say," he said. His mind returned to the matter of his missing money.

"That storekeeper fellow, O'Shane—what kind of man is he?" he asked the captain.

"The kind of man we shouldn't have bought grog from," came the answer promptly.

"I've heard things about him," put in the mate.

"They ain't nice things by a long chalk. We were goats to go near him. That was damn bad grog he gave us. I reckon I've had as much bad grog as any man in my time—and more, considering the queer places I've been in, knocking around. But I don't reckon I've ever had worse than O'Shane gave us the other night. I wouldn't be surprised if he made it himself, the swine!"

"I've heard things about him, too," said Wade, and considered telling of his loss.

But, before he could speak further, the captain, who had been in the islands more years than Wade was of age, gave it as his fixed and considered conviction that there was no doubt the things both Wade and the mate had heard were true enough provided they were bad enough.

O'Shane, he said, had an Irish name, but, like mostly everything he'd got, it wasn't rightly his. He wasn't an Irishman! No fear! He was a fight. The pearler boys were a tough crowd. The Portugee started it—putting at them as they came ashore. One of the boys dropped him on the sand.

"Afterwards his craft was sold and the money spent on paying a woman to rear the kid. Mick O'Shane, the man who doped us the other night, is that kid grown up."

"Having a father like that, he couldn't help being a corker," said the mate, and lit a cigarette. "Like father, like son."

"I understood he had reformed," said the captain. "Up till ten years ago he was one of the real bad-men of Hawaii, and there's a few rip-snorter bad-men round about there, I can tell you. Then suddenly he disappeared, and some time later turned up here. He had made a clean break away from his old associations. I am sure it was an honest attempt at reformation. There was the good influence of his mother, you know, to counteract the bad influence of his father. There's no reason why the saw shouldn't be 'Like mother, like son.' In order to make the change quite complete he had altered his name to 'O'Shane, choosing O'Shane probably hapazard. On the strength of the name he got into the habit of passing himself as an Irishman, even to his way of talking."

The meal over, the captain and the mate returned to their vessel. Wade went out on to the veranda, where the sea lay before him like a wide field strangely blue, and was best to do.

He made to turn and go back indoors in search of the girl, but stopped.

Coming round a bend of the beach, walking boldly, with a fine, free swinging of his arms, was the storekeeper himself.

"It's soberin' ye are, I'm thinkin'," said O'Shane easily as he ascended the veranda steps. "It was a great lot of drink ye swamped. A great lot. I'm somethin' of a drinker meself, but yourself ye're wonderful, me boy."

O'Shane was a personality, outstanding and impressive, and the note of his personality was threat. An enormous man, much more than six feet tall and proportionately broad, with chest and shoulders which strained the seams of his white coat, and biceps that bulged the sleeves—his size alone was a threat.

Wade placed himself directly in his path.

Residents in Court to Halt Milk Plant Building

on Decatur street, Mr. Stinson said. He stated the noises have increased as the Smith Dairy business has continued to grow from year to year. He stated that he never complained before this about the alleged nuisance.

Mrs. Stinson, wife of the previous witness, said that she is awakened every morning about 3 o'clock by the noise of wagons and trucks running to the plant and loading cans and bottles.

Under cross examination Mrs. Stinson said she did not know what the new plant would be like.

R. R. Peterman, of 196 Decatur street, said that he gets no rest or sleep after 3 a. m. because of the wagons and trucks going in and away from the plant.

"There is so much noise there that my wife is under medical care constantly from a lack of sleep," Mr. Peterman testified.

Chief Burgess George S. Hotchkiss, testified as a former member of Council that he was familiar with Decatur street and that in his opinion it was strictly a residential section between West and Franklin streets. The same line of testimony was given by Councilman Joseph Steelman.

and had such universal support that not even the interests represented by Senator Crow dared object. The members from my county, of course, voted for the measure."

Senator Grundy said the Pennsylvania Manufacturers' Association was not against compensation or a fair revision, and the differences which developed were chiefly the result of misunderstandings between the industrialists and public officials.

Concluding his statement, Mr. Grundy said that as an employer he has never pursued a course inimical to the interests of labor and for years has favored the granting of greater benefits to men, women and children in industry.

She says, "The best way to prevent crime among boys and girls is to make them feel that they are dealing with understanding friends and not with punitive officers."

NEURITIS YIELD TO NEW KONJOLA

New Medicine Strikes at Source of Stubborn Ailments—Brings New Health to Happy Lady

MRS. SARA ANN HAAG

"I can hardly believe one medicine can do all the things Konjola did for me," said Mrs. Sara Ann Haag, Route No. 2, Punxsutawney. "I had about everything wrong with me. My stomach, liver and kidneys were all weak and gave me trouble. I had no appetite, was subject to bilious headaches and frequent bladder actions. Finally rheumatism and neuritis attacked me. There were times when the painful swelling from these dread ailments made it impossible for me to do the lightest housework."

"In a little over a month after I began taking Konjola my health troubles were over. This seems difficult to believe, I know, but it is actually true. My stomach, liver and kidneys had cleared up entirely and I ate heartily without any discomfort whatever. The pains of rheumatism and neuritis had faded and I was able to get about without pain or trouble. My general health today is better than it has been in many years and I owe it all to the power of this great medicine."

It is logical to believe that what Konjola has done for others, it can, and will, do for you. This is especially true in cases where Konjola is given a fair trial consisting of from six to eight bottles over a period of as many weeks.

Konjola is sold in Bristol, Pa., at Hoffman's Cut Rate Store, and by all the best druggists in all towns throughout this entire section.—(Adv.)

SPORTS

TWO TEAMS DESIRE SERVICES OF GRIMES

By Davis J. Walsh
I. N. S. Sports Editor

NEW YORK, Apr. 17.—Seeing a sure pennant in the twenty or more games he would win on their behalf, the Chicago Cubs and the St. Louis Cardinals already have made overtures to the Boston Club for Burleigh Grimes. Both offers were bona fide. Both were refused.

These statements were fired point blank at the writer today and the man who vouchsafed them may be designated as one who is in a position to speak with authority on the subject. His name is Grimes. He added that the Cardinals offered two players and the Cubs three, each proposal having a supplemental money inducement. This wasn't haircut money, it seems, but nevertheless the Boston Club was looking pensively out the window.

Both the Cubs and Cardinals are ranking contenders, yet Grimes showed no regret that fate had cast him for a role whose prospects were all too dubious. In fact, he professed to hold no resentment for anybody, not even those who last week arranged a preposterous trade, whereby he went from a possible pennant winner, the Pirates, to a probable tail-end of the Braves.

Paraphrasing old Uncle Tom, he dismissed the incident lightly.

"They can sell my body," said he, "but my career belongs to Burleigh Grimes. They can't take that away from me. I'll be pitching baseball when some of the men they trade me for, and even perhaps some of the men who trade me, are done."

Grimes makes quite a point of philosophy and tolerance. He wants the Pirates to win the pennant, if the Braves can't. He wants Percy Lee Jones, the man who figured with him in the recent trade, to win twenty-five scheduled games this year. Yet, deep down, there must be a feeling of pained incredulity toward the series of asinine deals in which he has figured.

The Pirates were satisfied to take Jones, an indifferent left hander. And Grimes, no doubt feeling a bit defensive about the matter, attempts to explain it thus:

That Jewel Ems, the new Pirate manager, feared to keep Grimes more than he feared to let him go; that Dreyfuss threatened to reduce his original offer unless Grimes signed promptly at the terms presented, a threat he found so intolerable that he says he asked to be traded.

Anyway, this was only one silly trade. What of the others? The Giants for example, traded him for Vic Aldridge and the latter is no longer in the major leagues and hasn't been for two years, during which Grimes has won more than 40 games. It seemed he had no comment to make on this masterpiece.

What, then, of the Brooklyn trade, by which the Dodgers took title to Henline, a thirdrate catcher?

"The tip off on that was that they didn't need catchers," he said with a smile at his own expense. "It was apparent that somebody decided that any price was a reasonable one."

"I have my faults," came a hasty afterthought. "I don't say 'yes' when I mean 'no.' I'm crazy to win and maybe I force some of my enthusiasm on others. But I'm not trying to steal anybody's job when I try to help young players. Their development helps the club and that helps me. I need eight good men out there or I don't win the ball game. That's mere horse sense."

However, if anybody in baseball feels the slightest animosity for Grimes, he is pleased to reply that he himself feels none. McGraw? It was a real pleasure to work for him. Donie Bush? The greatest guy in the world. Dreyfuss? To Grimes, he is "Mr. Dreyfuss," it seems, and the inference is that their relationship was at least a respectful one. Robbie? They don't speak but this, says Grimes, is just an incident.

"We all need each other in this game," was his valedictory and not a bad one.

Smarter men have said dumber things than this.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Carter, of 806 Mansion street, were Sunday visitors of their son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Carter, of Cornwells Heights.

Mrs. Alice Patterson, of Bath street; Miss Mabel Dieterick, of 129 Dorrance street; Miss Frances Patterson, and Charles Lancaster, of Emille, motored to Washington, D. C., on Saturday and remained over the week-end. While there, Mrs. Patterson and Mr. Lancaster enjoyed an airplane flight over the city.

Mrs. Harry Crohe, Sr., and Mrs. Daniel Scheffey, of Cleveland street; Mrs. Harry Crohe, Jr., of McKinley street; Mrs. George Johnson, of Wilson avenue; Mrs. Vandine, of Buckley street, and Mrs. Frank Crohe, of Edgely, attended the funeral of a relative in Philadelphia, on Thursday.

Don't deny yourself the luxury of Camels

REAL SMOKE LUXURY that costs no more! The fullest, most satisfying smoke-delight ever put into a cigarette—and at the usual cigarette price! Why be content with less, when you can have the ultimate smoking pleasure in Camels?

Camel luxury starts with the tobaccos—the choicest Turkish and Domestic leaf that can be selected. All the mild, mellow, natural goodness of these tobaccos is preserved and retained in the exclusive Camel blend—a harmony of fragrance beyond imitation. And the most modern and scientific manufacturing processes complete the assurance of luxury in Camels.

Treat yourself to real cigarette enjoyment!
